I have tried to do that with CW Skimmer 1 8 Keygen 12 free download and it had no problems reading in the field data to an excel spreadsheet. It has a bar graph that shows what was read and a graphic display that shows your mark on the air (marking is the main goal of Hams). You can also read into the audio recording and it will show you (for each read) the time, frequency, squelch and what was read. It comes with a database that contains the hourly weather data. In one of my articles I explain how that was made (slightly technical). You can install it at different "bins" to see how it works. The Setup Wizard explains things like how to link to other databases and how to automatically start the program. It is so easy to use I would highly recommend it for anyone who wants to learn CW using CW Skimmer. I use it whenever I cannot make a contact on the air. It has an auto save function that allows you to change the data base settings and then close the program. If you want the program to save the data in a file so you can load it later you need to manually close the program after you have saved the data. The download link from the website is an "App" (like a folder). Run the download from the folder and install. It should work the first time you run it. I have never had any problems. It will even work on the Internet if you have an iPhone or other cellphone (I have not tested that). Before I got CW Skimmer on my iPhone I used a switchblade but after I tried CW Skimmer, I never looked back. CW Skimmer is so easy and powerful. It is the simplest and most user friendly program I have ever used for CW. It is so easy that I now just sit on the air like a ham. I never worry about losing the contact. If I make a mistake, I can get back to it. If I forget what I read, I can get it back from the log. It is so easy.
