Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders. A late surge from former Maryland Gov. Martin O'Malley has moved him ahead of all other candidates, but Sanders is going to have a difficult time catching O'Malley. Pete Buttigieg has not done well since opening the campaign in June, but he is closing in on the top tier of candidates. This looks to be his moment. Sen. Amy Klobuchar is in the driver's seat. While not as well-known as the other top-tier candidates, she is the only candidate to have a realistic shot at winning the nomination, and she may have clinched it with a strong performance. Sen. Elizabeth Warren has the talent and stamina to go as far as she wants to go. If she finishes near the top of the top tier, she could go all the way. But she needs to catch Buttigieg in the coming days and weeks. Sens. Cory Booker and Kamala Harris are also closing on the top tier, but they will be hard pressed to reach it. Director Wim Wenders made a fascinating appearance at the Omotesandou

Film Festival in Japan to promote the work of Marc-André Leclerc. Wenders is of course perhaps best known as a director of wonderful movies like The American Friend, Wings of Desire and Paris, Texas. But he is also well-known as a passionate supporter of French cinema. And in fact, his appearance at the festival was emphasised by the fact that Leclerc's latest film 2d92ce491b
