For example: class Foo { List Allocate(); } Foo ff = new Foo(); ff.Allocate().Add(1); I want return List inside the ff object so I can work with it from outside. A: Assuming Foo is not sealed, you can do it with anonymous type. List Allocate() { return new List { 1 }; }
TIMP-2 protein levels are reduced in the saliva of oral squamous cell carcinoma patients. Tissue inhibitors of metalloproteinases (TIMPs) are important regulators of tumor progression and metastasis. Tissue inhibitor of metalloproteinases-2 (TIMP-2) is the most prominent metalloproteinase (MMP) inhibitor in tissue and its expression is induced during wound healing and in response to tissue injury. The purpose of this study was to analyze the expression and secretion of TIMP-2 protein in the saliva of oral squamous cell carcinoma (OSCC) patients. TIMP-2 concentrations were measured in both the serum and saliva of patients with OSCC (n = 82) and controls (n = 84). Detection and immunodetection of the TIMP-2 protein was performed in sera and saliva using Western blot, enzyme-linked immunosorbent assay and immunohistochemistry. Quantification of the TIMP-2 protein in the saliva of patients and controls was performed using enzyme-linked immunosorbent assay. The results were analyzed using a Mann-Whitney test, a comparison of proportions and an ROC curve. The results showed no

Germany will step up its "hybrid war" against Russia over Crimea and other issues, German foreign minister Sigmar Gabriel told the newspaper Bild on Monday, adding that he did not rule out the prospect of arming Ukraine, or even the U.S. "A decisive phase is coming," Gabriel said. "I hope that the political will can be found for an East-West alliance, in which Germany plays a leading role." Gabriel warned that if NATO does not make good on its pledge to give a strong message to Russia, "we must step up our response and prepare for conflict." He added: "We must not allow Russia to bully the West into a situation of no return. When we decide to take steps in this direction we must do so correctly. The Russian Federation is a hostile state." It was the harshest speech from a senior German official since the Ukraine crisis started in early 2014. In an interview with Bild, Gabriel said he agreed with the language of the U.S. State Department in a recent report, which compared Russia's annexation of Crimea and inroads in eastern Ukraine to Adolf Hitler's 1938 annexation of Czechoslovakia. "The description in the report of Russia's actions is spot on," Gabriel said. "We see a clear parallel. We have fought against Nazism in the past and must not be ashamed of that." German Chancellor Angela Merkel earlier this month pledged to deploy in coming years an estimated 300 soldiers to a newly created Rapid Response Force aimed at countering Moscow's military aggression. The force is part of a NATO plan to swiftly mobilize 4,000 troops from 28 countries to the country's eastern flank to protect it from Russian aggression in case of threat from the east. Russia said the plan would strengthen NATO military presence in the Baltics, which were ex-Yugoslav republics before they became independent. But Gabriel suggested the move was designed to intimidate the Kremlin. "This is not a purely defensive plan," the minister said. "It is an offensive plan aimed at Russia." Gabriel said the plan is meant as a response to the Russian military's Zapad (West) drills, which were held last year near the Baltic states as a show of strength against NATO forces. He said Ukraine, Georgia and Moldova must remain within the European Union. The minister also said any unification of Germany with Austria should be subject to a referendum, suggesting that would ba244e880a
