Optically-driven metal surface-enhanced Raman scattering of fluorescent molecules at near infrared excitation wavelengths. Metal surface-enhanced Raman scattering (SERS) provides a means of enhancing the signal of weak Raman scattering from Raman-active molecules. It is based on a process whereby a molecule with the inherent Raman signal is adsorbed onto a metal surface. These surface-adsorbed molecules are often characterized by a significant enhancement of the Raman scattering intensity. The enhancement factor is generally proportional to the fourth power of the ratio of the electric field intensities at the metal-molecule and molecule- 2d92ce491b
