Apple and quince (Cydonia oblonga) juices were examined to determine their total antioxidant activity and total phenolic content (TAC) as well as their individual phenolic compounds. A correlation coefficient analysis of the results showed that all parameters except DPPH was correlated at high significance. Quince was found to contain higher TAC and phenolic compounds compared to apple. Chlorogenic acid was the predominant phenolic compound in both juices, with quince having a higher concentration. In conclusion, it can be suggested that phenolics from quince contribute more to the overall antioxidant capacity compared to the apples, which is mainly due to a higher concentration of chlorogenic acid. West is Best. Sallie Mae, Freddie Mac, and Fannie Mae are selling billions of dollars in mortgage-backed securities to finance today's interest-only loans. The banks which hold those securities will, under present regulations, absorb any losses they incur. That is why the mortgage lending business is an unsustainable business.
