Several questions are used in the Experimental Program in Modern Thought (EPMT). The curriculum consists of approximately 200 items that present a series of questions and discussion issues about a set topic. Students are expected to answer the questions themselves. The goal is not to score the student but to make sure they are thinking and not just reading a text. I plan to use these questions in future classes and look forward to posting them here. The first question is: What purpose does EPMT serve? These questions, are very important for the students to answer and I try to find the most appropriate question to ask for each set of topics and to grade the answer. Each of the questions below are used in a variety of situations and therefore a variety of different answer choices are possible. The answer to this question should be straightforward and provide a good reason for using EPMT. So the purpose of this unit is two-fold. First, it provides a way to test students who are thinking and trying to answer questions themselves. Secondly, as the questions are associated with more formal language and can be used to differentiate the students. Below are some of the questions and answer choices that are used with the students. I hope you find the answers helpful and I look forward to any questions that are posted here. Best regards. EPMT Questions and Answers - Will they learn to really think and to evaluate written arguments? If I am correct, the central question is "Why do I use EPMT?" Question: What is the purpose of EPMT? Essentially, the purpose of EPMT is to test whether students are thinking and able to evaluate their own writing. This is not the only purpose of EPMT but it is a major one. Answer: The purpose of EPMT is to test whether students are thinking and able to evaluate their own writing. The reason why I believe that is because it forces them to think about the written argument and make an evaluation about the work they have done.
