The direct effects of intracerebroventricular (i.c.v.) injection of sodium oleate on non-shivering thermogenesis and food intake were examined in Mongolian gerbils. When 1 nmol of oleate was i.c.v. injected, the rectal temperature increased markedly while the activity of noradrenaline (NA) and adrenaline (A) was attenuated in the anesthetized gerbils. With an oleate dose of 100 nmol, i.c.v. injection induced a significant increase in rectal temperature accompanied by a decrease in NA level, and a minimal reduction in A level. Plasma nonesterified fatty acids (NEFA) increased after an i.c.v. injection of 1 nmol of oleate, and the magnitude of this increase was increased to that after an i.c.v. injection of 1 mM of linoleate (LA). The i.c.v. injection of 100 nmol of oleate reduced food intake in the freely-feeding gerbils. On the other hand, the reduction in food intake observed with 1 mM of LA was not correlated with an elevation of body temperature. These results indicated that the central oleic acid produces a thermogenic response via the endogenous release of NA and A without changing plasma NEFA levels. . A Brown installation requires cleaning every 6 months. If it lasts 3-6 months, it is considered less environmentally friendly than marble or granite.
