1. Reduce Color Bleed and Transference If you use "raindrop" brushes, then you might experience a color bleed, or spillover. To prevent this, create a pattern that has a hard edge, such as a circle, a square, or a line. Once you get the desired result, merge the area and go back over the edges. This often reduces bleeding and transference. • Use the Magic Wand To use the Magic Wand, click on the tool in the toolbar to turn it on. Next, drag the tool over the image to allow the tool to recognize areas of the image. Click on the "magic wand" button and you'll see the options shown in Figure 1-2. Figure 1-2: Settings such as Tolerance, Lighter Color, and Alpha Channel in Photoshop. • Use the Selection Brush The Selection Brush is another excellent tool to use when retouching. Click on the brush and drag over the photo to highlight specific areas. • Use the Lasso Tool The Lasso tool (also in Figure 1-2) is quite useful when retouching. Drag the box over the areas you wish to select. Once the box is over the area you wish to select, then click on it or press the Spacebar key to select the image you want. Photoshop will then create a selection in the new area and save the selection. You can then delete the part of the photo that you do not want to save. • Use the Hand Tool The Hand Tool is the pen tool (Figure 1-2). Click on it and drag the cursor over the image. The tool creates a path that you can use to retouch images. • Use the Eraser Click on the Eraser to use it. In Figure 1-2, the white area is where you can erase pixels. However, an Eraser's primary purpose is to remove unwanted objects. For example, if you want to erase hair, make sure that the Eraser tool is active and then click on a section of the hair. You will see a red box appear around that area and a box will appear over the selected area (Figure 1-3). Click the box to select it. Then you can drag the box around and remove the hair. Figure 1-3: The red box around the hair indicates that the area is selected. • Use the Magic Wand To use the
