How can I get the list of all the modules that are imported (eg. all the dlls) when I execute a Python 3.4 program? How can I see the DLLs that are created? Is this information present anywhere? Thanks. A: To check which libraries are loaded at runtime, see the `sys.modules` dictionary. It stores a dictionary of the loaded objects. For example, if we import the `math` module as `math`:

import math

Then we can examine the contents of this dictionary with a `keys()` call:

>>> import sys
>>> sys.modules {'test.py': } >>> for module in sys.modules.keys(): ...
print(module) ... 'sys' 'test' 'math'

A: That's in `sys.modules`. You'll get an error that a module doesn't exist in `sys.modules` if the import fails. To see the dynamic libraries, you can get the same information from `/proc/self/exe`:

import os, sys
for i in os.listdir(os.environ['PROCESS_PATH']):
    if i.startswith('python') and i.endswith('\'
```
