To explore the feasibility of color Doppler flow imaging (CDFI) to measure blood flow in the uterine arteries of pregnant women with insulin-dependent diabetes mellitus and to compare the results with those obtained in normoglycemic women in the third trimester of pregnancy. Thirty-seven pregnant women with insulin-dependent diabetes mellitus and 38 pregnant women without diabetes were enrolled in the study, including three time periods: first trimester (n=16), third trimester (n=8), and full-term delivery (n=8). The same investigator performed and analyzed the examinations in all cases. Transvaginal gray-scale imaging, pulsed-wave Doppler ultrasound, and CDFI were performed at the women's initial prenatal visit, in the third trimester, and at full-term delivery. Uterine artery peak systolic and end diastolic velocities, pulsatility index, resistivity index, and resistance index were compared for normoglycemic women in the third trimester, and for women in the third trimester of pregnancy with insulin-dependent diabetes mellitus and full-term delivery. The mean (+/-SEM) peak systolic and end diastolic flow velocities of the uterine arteries in the third trimester of pregnancy were higher than in normoglycemic women in the third trimester (p=.009 and p=.002, respectively). Resistance index values in the uterine arteries were higher in pregnant women with insulin-dependent diabetes mellitus (n=8) than in normoglycemic women (n=37) in the third trimester (p=.001), reflecting the increased vascular resistance. Resistivity index values were also higher in pregnant women with insulin-dependent diabetes mellitus than in normoglycemic pregnant women at full-term delivery (p=.001), reflecting the severity of the disease. 570a42141b
