The quality of care for persons after they leave the hospital is an essential part of the quality of care for persons after they are discharged from the hospital. The quality of acute care at the start of postdischarge services is as important as that provided during the acute episode. However, there is little research addressing the quality of care for persons immediately after discharge from the hospital. Although many studies show that the care provided to persons after hospital discharge is not necessarily as good as care provided in the hospital, most studies have been retrospective. The state of Colorado has funded a prospective, multiyear study of the quality of care for persons after they leave the hospital. In this article, we describe the Colorado study, the results of a sample of the first year of the study, and present the results of the Colorado study and the implications for the quality of care after discharge.package ch.epfl.bluebrain.nexus.common.image; import com.google.common.base.Objects; import com.google.common.base.Strings; import ch.epfl.bluebrain.nexus.common.serialization.identifiers.Reference; import ch.epfl.bluebrain.nexus.common.serialization.identifiers.TypeReference; import ch.epfl.bluebrain.nexus.common.util.StringUtils; import ch.epfl.bluebrain.nexus.iam.types.Repository; import ch.epfl.bluebrain.nexus.iam.types.User; import ch.epfl.bluebrain.nexus.jul. 3e33713323
