Deciphering the Lys63-linked polyubiquitination of Cdc6-A protein kinase from Schizosaccharomyces pombe. Cdc6-A protein kinase from the fission yeast Schizosaccharomyces pombe serves as the prototype of a family of ubiquitin-dependent kinases. Biochemical and genetic approaches have shown that its activity is subject to regulation by its covalent attachment of the ubiquitin-like protein Rad6/Ubc4. Here we report the cloning and characterization of the cdc6-A gene, which encodes a protein containing the Drosophila cdc6 (cell division cycle 6) protein kinase domain. Sequence analysis and functional complementation tests indicate that cdc6-A is the major gene involved in cdc6-A gene function. Expression of cdc6-A is induced in S. pombe cells experiencing DNA damage, and results in the phosphorylation of Cdc6-A protein at serine 160. The Cdc6-A gene product is autophosphorylated and its ubiquitination is mediated by the Rad6/Ubc4 E2/E3 enzyme complex. Phosphorylation-dependent association with the E3 ubiquitin ligase Rad6 results in Cdc6-A ubiquitination and subsequent degradation. Our results suggest that ubiquitin-dependent phosphorylation and degradative pathways operate in the same signal transduction cascade for Cdc6-A in S. pombe.
