1. What is Photoshop? Photoshop is a graphic editing program designed by Adobe Systems and first released in 1992. The original version of Photoshop could only open formats originally used by a digital camera, including JPEG, TIFF, and Adobe's own TIFF-format (.tif). Today Photoshop can open a much wider range of file types, including raw files and their native format.

Photoshop features a powerful graphic design environment that enables basic to advanced image editing. The user can select specific tool and editing options using one of the three image windows and a palette or toolbox. Photoshop also offers features for working with layers, creating GIF and PSD (Photoshop Design) files, and working with the clipboard. Can be a very powerful tool for a variety of editing tasks 2. What is a raster image? Raster images are made up of pixels. The image in Figure 3.2 is made up of pixels. Each pixel is a square. This image is a raster image because it's made up of dots, or pixels. The pixels that make up an image are an integral part of the image. Raster images offer more storage space than vector images, but the pixels themselves form the image rather than a set of mathematical coordinates used to define it. Raster images may also be color, black and white, grayscale or RGB. You can capture this image as a black and white or color image, or as a grayscale or RGB image. 3. What is a vector image? Vector images are mathematical and make no assumption as to how the image is made up of pixels. You can use a vector image as a raster image or without having to worry about using the extra space that a raster image would require. Figure 3.1 This image is a vector image that can be opened in Adobe Photoshop. Image: Morley Heale. 4. What is a black and white image? A black and white image is typically an image that contains only pixels representing either the black or white colors and no color pixels. Black and white images are usually easy to spot. An example is shown in Figure 3.1. 5.

What is RGB? This image is a RGB image. The three colors that are used in RGB are Red, Green, and Blue. Each color is represented by its own dot or pixel. Photoshop's RGB color values are generally between 0 and 255 (0 is pure
