Coast Guard aircrew transfer water from open body of water to an aerostat to assist with a rescue near Cape Lookout, N.C., Jan. 27, 2018. (Coast Guard video via Cmdr.

Jonathan Thompson/U.S. Coast Guard) Dec. 1, 2017 Coast Guard rescues 59 for life

Today I am announcing, we have now saved 59 people from the ocean at the Coast Guard's Station Cape Lookout in North Carolina. The rescue happened on Jan. 27, when an open body of water collided with an aerostat tethered a quarter mile off of the base. The rescue is the most significant in recent Coast Guard history, and I am proud to say we are a part of it. Watch the video below to see the Coast Guard's rescue of 59 people from the ocean: During the rescue, four Coast Guard crew members remained aboard the airship to monitor the situation and help save as many people as possible. They used an inflatable boat to transfer water to the airship as needed. The Coast Guard receives many inquiries from people who want to know more about their ship after a rescue. I decided to answer a few questions about our part in this rescue. Here's what I learned from this rescue: How big is the airship? The airship has an area of 3500 square feet. How large is the airship compared to a standard inflatable boat? It's about twice the size of the most common inflatable boat. What type of boat are Coast Guard crew members using to transfer water from the airship to the open body of water? In this case it was a small inflatable boat called a “Ray-o-vac” which is about five feet by five feet, but it can be repositioned if needed, and it comes in different sizes. Can I visit the airship? Absolutely! People can visit the airship for a donation of $10 a person. It’s not an autograph-signing line, but you can take photos of the crew and airship. In fact, after you take a photo, the crew will give you the name and phone number of the crew member who takes care of the airship. This is a special aircraft that is just for emergencies. The air
