Q: Bitbucket markdown editor is reopening and closing all my tabs I'm writing a long piece of Markdown code and the last one opened has just started to display a window asking me to accept the license. I have several other code editors open, and so I tried to close the license window using the "X" button to make sure it wouldn't close them. It did however, close all of them, including the one where I'm editing my Markdown. Does anyone know what could be causing this, and if there is anything I can do to prevent it? A: This appears to be a known issue. You can work around it by pressing Command + Z. On a Mac, hold down Command, then hit Z. On Windows, hold down Control, then hit Z. The Document CSS autoplay fix as introduced in GitLab 8.0.1 has solved this issue for me. A: X also works on Mac. In Linux (and Ubuntu) you must use Ctrl+Z (Control+Shift+Z on Windows). On Windows: To close an unwanted window: Press and hold the Alt key to activate the Windows taskbar. Right-click the unwanted window. Click End Task on the context menu. A: You should be able to close that window by pressing the Meta key (usually Option on a Mac). You may need to be in focus of the app or have it as the last window in the taskbar if the app hasn't given up focus. Q: EventHubTrigger log aggregation I'm trying to use EventHubTrigger to read data from an EventHub The documentation says: Use EventHubTrigger to read messages from a shared Event Hub. By default, the following message IDs are used: 740420 to process messages with tags {machine,device} and the tags key missing. 704310 to process messages with tags {machine,device,debug} and the tags key missing. 705501 to process messages with tags {machine,device,debug} and the tags key set to {system,event_type} and the event_type key set to {
