“The addition of the HyperMotion engine brings rich and realistic simulation of players and the physical movement,” said Ian Livingstone, Creative Director at EA Sports. “It truly captures the excitement of being a player.” The new engine also introduces more than 1,000 animations that enrich the game play. “We used real world players from three different continents and over one hundred real world football experts to collect the data,” said Sean Barrett, Creative Director, FIFA.

“This simulation allows us to truly capture all the movements and nuances of these players.” HyperMotion technology has been piloted extensively for the FIFA series, with players from various football leagues, and the technology has been proven to successfully capture the real motion and intensity of players on the ball, as well as over the course of a full game. Beginning with FIFA 19, EA Sports has been utilizing the data to make the game more authentic in some areas, and now with the addition of the HyperMotion technology, it promises to go even further. The technology is used in a number of ways in the gameplay, including, but not limited to:

- Creating more realistic players.
- Improving the ball’s weight.
- Fairer passing and shooting when movement is taken into account.
- Creating a more realistic ball handling during the course of a game.
- Creating more realistic physical player movements, including more controlled, erratic and unpredictable player movement.
- Having players move more naturally on the ball, making passing and dribbling more realistic.
- Players moving more naturally in defensive battles for the ball.
- Players in possession of the ball fighting for it during defending and attacking.
- Improved ball physics and animations, including more natural movement.
- Players making more intelligent decisions in real-time during gameplay.
- Improved AI, including more smart decision-making, attacking and defending.
- Improved ball flight and movement, including faster movement across and through the game.
- Improved juggling for goalkeepers.
- Improved goal kicks.
- Improved goal kicks and their trajectory.
- Improved jumping.
- Improved shot power of players.
- Adding more variety and complexity to player strategies.
- Intelligent defensive decision making.
- New contextual offensive controls.
- Improved goal celebration animations for

Based on the official rules of the NFL, FIFA is football's official video game - offering authentic, real-world dribbling, shooting and head-to-head challenges. FIFA is made by a team of FIFA Pro License players from around the world, with a creative team that includes the Premier League, Serie A, La Liga, Bundesliga, MLS and more. What did the development team focus on when designing FIFA? We looked at real football in the way it is actually played. That means that we started by defining and describing what each player does in a game of football and how they use the ball. We then created an advanced physics system that tells us exactly how a player will react to every single thing that is going on around him. Each player makes countless moves and decisions during a match, and this allows FIFA to create perfect realism. We also developed an AI system that takes every single action and sees how it affects the game and others around it. Every element of football is modelled, and so the very smallest details are all included in our simulations. We used to FIFA's previous engines, but we started from the very beginning. This was essential to ensuring that FIFA builds on its history while creating something completely new. As for the physics, we looked at all the things a football player can interact with, and we worked hard to replicate each one on the consoles. Each part of a player's body has a force acting on it, with exactly the right amount of weight to make collisions believable and exciting. We worked with creators from around the world to ensure that every aspect of football was correct and that the game feels so much like the real thing, but with the ability to be simulated on a console. For example, we have worked with the NFL to get the ball roll and the way a defender runs for it to feel exactly the way it does in real life. At the same time, we have also taken care of in-game details that we can control, such as the way the pass feels to the player, the way the ball bounces, the way the wind affects the ball and the way the ball thuds in the ground. What kind of improvements can you make to the game in FIFA 22? The changes that we've made in the physics are the first steps towards getting the game closer to real football. For
