We have included tips for some of the most common tasks that you will likely perform with each tool.

The Basic Tools ## Photo Tools Photoshop is well suited to digital photographers for a variety of purposes. This section describes some of the basic tool types that are used by most photoshoppers and provides information on how to use these tools. As you experiment with Photoshop, you will find that the tools are versatile enough that you can use them on just about any image you want to work with. Some tools are equally suited to retouching photos and creating graphics. ## Tool Palettes Photoshop has been an extremely useful program for some time, and designers make it work for them with custom tool palettes. A tool palette is a collection of linked tools in which you can select any tool in the palette, and it is normally associated with a particular task. If you look closely at the tool palettes in Adobe Photoshop, you'll see that they usually have the name of the tool followed by one or more icons. The most important tool palettes are the: * Quick Selection tool * Object Selection tool * Content-Aware Move tool * Content-Aware Fill tool * Content-Aware Mirror tool However, the icons that appear at the bottom of the tool palettes are not standard icons for all tools. There are many different types of tool palettes and tools in Photoshop, and we will be discussing them in the following sections. ## Selection Tools A `_selection_` is the Propofol Emulsion Versus Midazolam for Sedation during Endoscopic Retrograde Cholangiopancreatography: A Randomized, Double-blind, Placebo-controlled Study. An increasing number of endoscopic retrograde cholangiopancreatography (ERCP) procedures are being performed. Propofol is a good alternative to sedative agents for sedation. However, propofol has a different pharmacokinetic profile than benzodiazepines. We aimed to compare the efficacy and safety of the propofol- and midazolam-based sedation regimens during ERCP. This randomized, double-blind, placebo-controlled study was conducted at the outpatient clinic of the Department of Gastroenterology, Seoul National University Bundang Hospital, Bundang, South Korea, between January 2009 and June 2014. One hundred twenty patients scheduled for ERCP were randomly assigned to receive either propofol-based or midazolam-based sedation in a 1:1 ratio, according to the patients' will. Propofol and midazolam sedation was performed separately by a sedation service nurse. The primary outcome was the presence of adequate sedation. Secondary outcomes included the patients' self-reported use of analgesics and sedative agents, complete pain relief, and procedural time. One hundred nineteen patients were enrolled in the study. There were no significant differences in the rate of adequate sedation, patients' self-reported use of analgesics and sedative agents, and patients' complete pain relief between the two groups. However, the procedural time was significantly shorter in the propofol group than in the midazolam group (mean \pm SD, 105 \pm 9 vs 127 \pm 14 minutes, P Garden Lodge is perfect for that special weekend getaway.
